Corax λέγει, corvus. A Rhetorickmaster of Sicily; the first that taught for pay; he covenanted to teach one Tilius his skill, on this condition, That he should pay half his money in hand, and the rest, the first Cause he should carry in pleading.
Tilius proved a good Proficient in the study of Eloquence, yet would not take upon him to plead: Corax thinking he deferred his pleading only on purpose to defeat him of his due, sued him, and brought this Argument against him: Know this, saith he, you foolish fellow, that however the case go, thou must pay me my money; for if thou get the better of me, then my money is due by the bargain between us; if I have the better, then it is due by law. Nay wife Sir, replied Tilius, not so; you can get it neither way; for if you cast me, then by compact between us, you cannot demand any money; for our bargain was, That you should have it when I overcame; but if I cast you, you cannot lawfully ask it of me, being quitted by the Judge's sentence. The Judge hearing this witty reply, gave no definitive sentence of the case, but only cried out alluding to the name of Corax, i. Crow. Κῶν λέγει

DÆDALUS, dædalus. I. artificiosus, à dæiv, sciv; vel dædalus vario: Fest. faber Atheniensis, Miclonis filius. The most ingenious Artificer in the world; whence the Proverb, Dadall opera, when we would commend a thing for the curiousness of the work: he invented the Saw, the Ax, the Plummert, the Augur, Glue, Cement, Sails for Ships, the Sail-yard; he also made statues with a device to make the eyes move as if they were living: being accused for the death of Perich his Nephew, he fled into Crete, and there made the Labyrinth or Maze, into which Minos put him and his son Icarus, because he had made a Cow of wood, wherein Pasiphaë putting her self plaid the beast with a Bull. He seeing no way of escape, desired feathers and wax, to make a present, as he pretended, for the King, but he made himself and his son wings, & so flew from Crete to Sardinia, and from thence to Cuma, where having left his son by the way, he built a Temple to Apollo. The ground of the story is this, Dædalus being privy to the adultery of Pasiphaë, the wife of Minos, with his servant named Taurus, was put in prison with his son Icarus; but he escaped with his son and some other discomfited persons from Crete in some small Ships: Minos pursued so hard, that Icarus his ship was split on the Rack: Dædalus over-ruled the King to Sicily, being the swiftest, because he had then invented his sail-clothes, when as all others knew no speedier sailing than by the help of Oars; whence the proverb, Remigis Dædaleis, to signify a thing done with dexterity and speed. Hinc Adj. Dadalus, a, um; Curiously wrought, finely bedecked. As Dadala tecta, Vir. Dadala tellus, Lucr. Item Dadalus, a, um; Hor. of Dadalus. Item Dadaleus, a, um; Propert.

could not pronounce the letter r, and by putting fl in his mouth, and declaiming upon the Sea-floes, attained to a perfect way of speaking. When Philip had besieged Athens, he promised to raise his siege, if they would give in hostage ten Orators. Demosthenes told them this story, that the Wolves desired a League with the Shepherds, upon this condition, that the cause of strife might be taken away, which was the Shepherds' Mastership, this being granted, the Wolves without all fear made havoc of the Sheep. Even so would Philip do with you, said he, if once you deliver to him your Wacchonen, your Orators. When Antipater succeeded Alexander, he fled to save his life; Archias was sent to apprehend him, but he to prevent it drank poison which he had prepared and kept in his pipe for that purpose, and so ended his life.

EMPEDOCLES. τὸ κλέος ἔμπεδοκλῆς, id est, tabilis gloria. A Philo-sophus of Agrigentum that wrote of the nature of things in Greek verse (as Lucretius did in Latine) he taught that na-thing living ought to be eaten, and that all things were composed of love and discord, and that the feast of the Soul was not the heart nor the head, but the blood; he taught also that there were two half circles compassing between the heaven and the earth; the one whereof was composed of fire, the other of air, and that the former made the day, and the later the night.
 The relation of his death is by sundry Writers thus set down: that after his death he might be honoured as a God, he stole away from his company by night, and cast himself into the mouth of the burning mountain Ætna, that so the people finding him no where, might conceive he was taken up into heaven: but his two patients or iron-sliders, which were cast up again by the ve-demency of the flame, betrayed all his policy.

 Such desperate attempts will men undertake that do sich after honour, and are often cursed with the like cross events: he would be soon angry, and then implacable; whence the proverb in both these senses, Empedocles similitas, ἔμπεδοκλῆς ἰχ- της.

HERCULES, is; m. (ñ) per metath. ex gr. Ἡρακλῆς, idque qu. Ἡρῆς κλῖς, i. Junonis gloria, quod ejus nomen odio gloriam adeptus sit. Al. ab Ἡρῆς & κλῖς, q. d. herorum gloria. Cic. l. b. 3. de nat. Deorum 6 memorat hoc nomine fuisse appellatos: Varro 44. Veruntamen omnes qui robore prastiterunt, ab Hercule Jovis & Alcmenæ filio (qui & Alcides voc.) appellatos fuisse affirmat. Macr. Saturn. lib. 1. asserit Hercule esse Sælem (ut ex nomine satis claret, Ἡρακλῆς, n. est Ἡρῆς κλῖς, i. æru gloria, quæ nil aliud est nisi Solis illuminatio) et verò labores quos Hercules confectis credidit, sunt 12 signa Zodiaci, quæ Sol singulis annis conficit. The son of Jupiter, whom he got of Alcmena in the shape of her husband Amphitryo, whilst he was at the Wars; whence he is called Amphitryoniades, as on the mothers side Alcides. He was of a prodigious strength, and performed several exploits at the command of Juno his step-mother, who had a design of destroying him; the chief of which are those we call his twelve labours or adventures. First, He slew a Lion in the Wood Nemea. 2ly, He slew the Monster Hydra, in the Fens of Lerna. 3ly, He slew the wild Boar of Erymanthus, which wasted Arcadia. 4ly, He slew the Centauros. 5ly, He took a Stag running on foot. 6ly, He slew the Birds Stymphalides, which ate up the fruits. 7ly, He cleansed Augia's stable. 8ly, He brought a Bull from Crete into Greece, drawing him along the sea. 9ly, He took Diomedes King of Thrace, giving him to be eaten of his own man-eating horses; and afterwards breaking those wild horses, brought them to Eurystheus. 10ly, He took Geryon and his cattle, in his Voyage into Spain. 11ly, He went to Hell, and brought thence with him Theseus and Pirithous, bringing away the Dog Cerberus. 12ly, He took the golden Apple out of the garden of the Hesperides, and killed the Dragon that kept them. Truth is, there went several under this name; as Hercules Celticus, qui & Ogmios, famous for Eloquence; Ægyptius, too so called, one of which supposed to be Joshua; Tyrius, who planted at Cadiz in Spain, and turned Geryon with his two brothers out of the Kingdom; Justin. Libyus, who planted Sardinia, Sil. Romanus, qui & Sancus, Fest. & Fidius, Var. Germanus, Tac. all whose glories and enterprises were ascribed to the one, who was a Theban. He has given occasion to sundry Proverbs; as Ne Hercules quidem contra duos; Two to one is odds at football. Ex pede Herculem. Hercules cothurnos aptare infant. Hercules labor, &c. He went with a Club in his hand, and a Lions skin about him. After all his great achievements, by a mistake of his wife, putting on a poisonous shirt, he found himself in that torment, that he made a pile on mount Æta and burnt himself. After his death he was received into heaven; and being reconciled to his mother in law, married her waiting-woman Hebe.

 fuit, Ὀμῶν, i. obsequi datus fuit. An excellent Poet, whose proper name was Melitigenes, from the river Meles, near to which he was born. He wrote sundry Poems scattered here and there in the Countries where he travelled; which may be a reason not improbable, why so many Countries should challenge him to be theirs; they having the first Copies of his works, which in succeeding times were gathered together to make up complete Poems, and were called from thence Rapodia, παρ-ῶν. Two of these Poems are observed to comprehend the two parts of man: The Iliads describing the strength and vigour of the body; and the Odysses the subtlety and policy of the mind. Concerning his Country, there was a great Controversie among the Grecians, as may appear by these Verses: Ἐνθα πῶτος ἀνέστηκεν Ὀμῆρος

Janus, I, m. (à) vium, quod fuerit vini reperit. idem scil. Nasabo, unde & bisferus, quod & ante & post diluvium vixerit. hinc & Itali Genarii dict. Est & Janus Sol. Macr. The most ancient King of Italy, among the Aborigines, who received Saturn when his son Jupiter had banished him from Crete, and gave him a part of his Kingdom; Saturn taught him husbandry, and to coin money of brass, which on one side had the picture of a ship, on the other the picture of Janus. It is reported of him, that he was the wisest of all Kings, and knew things past and to come, therefore they pictured him with two faces: he was made a god after his death, and Numa built a temple unto him, which in the time of peace was shut, and in time of war open; whence Janus is called Patefaciens and Clusius; wherefore think that this Temple was built by Tatius and Romulus, at their joining in league together; whence he was thought to have two faces, for the reference he was thought to have unto two Kingdoms, then to be united. Janus is thought by some to be the same that Noah, whence he might be said to have two faces, the one looking backward, the other forward; the one looking upon the world before the flood, the other on the world after the flood: and for this reason perhaps the ship on his coin in memory of the Ark. MEDEA, a, f. (ēē) Poet. μεδία, à μῆδ & ἔδω, i. consilium. A notable Sorceress, the daughter of Æëtes King of Colchis, whence she her self is called Colchis. She entertained Jason, together with the rest of the Argonauts, when they came to Colchis, and falling in love with him, and being afraid lest he should not get off his adventure safe, (she knowing the dangers that he was to undergo) upon promise that he would marry her, taught him how he should tame the brazen-footed Bull, and cast the Dragon that watched the golden fleece into a dead sleep, and so lay him; which he did, and got the golden fleece. Then she fled away with Jason, and took her young brother Absyrtus along with her: whom her father pursuing them, she cut in many pieces, and threw his limbs in the way, that so her father being busied about gathering them up, they might have the more time for their escape. At length they came to Theffaly, where by her art she restored youth to Jason's old father Æëtes. She had two children by Jason, who at length forsook her, and married Creusa the daughter of Creon King of Corinth; whereas Medea being enraged, sent wild fire in a Cabinet on a token to Creusa, who opening it, the fire burst forth and burned her, and the whole Palace. Jason at this would have killed her, but she for further revenge, took both her children that she had by him, and slew them in his sight, and fled thence to Athens, where she married old Ægeus, and had by him a son called Medus. At length she raised Clouds and Winds, by which she was carried through the air with this son of hers into that part of Asia which from him was called Media. Hinc Medica, patrom. form. Medici herba, Ovid. Physical herbs. Medena. Newport in the Isle of Wight. Mederiacum. A Village in Guelderland, called now Melle.

He asked of Bacchus his guests, that all he touched might be gold, and he turned his hauses and whole mountaint into gold: at last being hungry, and touching meat, it turned into gold too; when seeing his folly, he desired to have this gift taken from him, and he was blidden to wash himself in the river Pactolus; whereupon he came to be as he was, but the river was ever after said to have golden sands: whence it was called Chrysothrona: afterwards Pan and Apollo striving for mastery, who sang the best, Midas alone judged on Pan's side, for which absurdity of his, Apollo in great anger clapt a pair of Ases ears on his head. By this fiction of the Poets was meant that Midas being a Tyrant had many hearers and sycophants, by whom he knew all that was done, or spoken of him in every corner of his Kingdom, as if he had long ears to hear what every one said; and his turning all things into gold, suits well with his tyranny, which ufeats dainties and made his subjects, whereby his private Coffers might be the better stored with abundance of gold; which is often as foolishly washed and washed away, as by cruel and unwise means it is come by. Vid. Ovid. Met. 11.

Nay, his cruelty went so far, that he set the City of Rome on fire, either because he did not like the structure of it, or because he would have the burning of Troy represented unto him (for in the mean time he was playing on a Harp the destruction of Troy,) or that he might exceed his Uncle Caligula in all devilish attempts; or because he was delighted in the sight of the flame. When this bawny crime was ascribed unto him, he put it upon the Christians, whereupon began the first bloody Persecution, an. Christ. 63. So barbarous was his cruelty, that he tortured and killed the Christians upon Stages for pleasure in the day-time, and in the night he burned their bodies, instead of torches, being wrapped up in pitched cloaths. At last hearing that his enemies were ready to surprize him he would gladly have somebody kill him; but neither would his own friends, nor any other do him that kindness; whereupon he cried out, Nec amicum habeo, nec inimicum; after which he fled into a Cave, where he was found dead; afterward his body being buried under the gate Flaminia, the Devils did much havoc that place, till the time of Paschalis the first, when they were fain to take up his bones and throw them into Tyber, which done, the Devils troubled them no more. NILUS, ἡ Νίλος, (i) Νῆλος, quod nomen numeris conficit 365, quot sunt dies in anno. Dicta a Niteo quodam rege Aegyptio, Diod. Sic. vel a Nilo Atlantis filio, ibi submersio, Eust. Al. a Νίλῳ novum timus, quo quatuor in invicem fecundat Aegypti solum: Νίλῳ δὲ Νίλῳ ἑκατόν, Νίλῳ δὲ Νίλῳ ἑκατόν, Heliodor. Recl. 777 dic. Bib. The river Nile, the largest and noblest of all Africk, that rises out of a great lake beyond the Line, or (as others) out of two springs in the Abassines Country, and runs Northward through Ethiopia and Egypt, where dividing it self into several streams, it discharges it self into the Mediterranean at nine mouths at Ptol. or seven, at Virg. whence Ovid calls it septemfluvium flumina Nili. It went anciently by several names, and so does now. The rise or head of Nile was a thing formerly unknown, whence Nill caput is used proverbially for a secret. Some therefore placed it in the Indies, others in mount Atlas, ancient Divines in the Earthy Paradise, but by later discoveries it appears to be in the Mountains of the Moon in Ethiopia. Its course in length, is thirty five degrees, which (allowing for its turnings and windings) make near upon a thousand German miles. It flows from the summer Solstice, till the autumnal Equinox. The water is sweet and wholesome, and breeds no fog or mist. Here grow Reeds, of which they made paper; whence Ovid calls it papyrifera Nilum. & Hinc Nilacum, a, um; Mart. & Nilonicum.

A King of Thebes, son of Laius and Jocasta; his father understanding by the Oracle of Apollo, that he should be killed by him, gave him to a shepherd to be slain; but he being moved with pity, did not kill the child, but left him where he thought he would die with hunger. By chance one Phorbas the King of Corinthia herdsman, as he went that way, finding him, took him up, & brought him home, and presented him to the Queen; who having no children of her own, brought him up as if he had been her own son. Afterward the Youth being grown up, and perceiving that he was not indeed the son of Polybus, he went to seek his father to Phocis, and there being a mutiny amongst them, he slew his father unwittingly in the scuffle, as the Oracle had foretold; & thence going for Thebes he in the same ignorance married his own mother Jocasta, and had issue by her. At last coming to the knowledge of these dreadful misdeeds, which had befallen him, for grief and madness he pulled out his own eyes, and was led about by his daughter Antigona. Hinc Oedipodionides. Chariots; that he who won should have her, but he who lost the goal, should lose his life too. Thirteen thus ran themselves out of their lives. At last Pelops came, and bribing Myrtilus the Coachman to leave one of his masters Chariot-wheels not pinned, he ran both the daughter and the King down with her, called ever after Peloponnesus from his name. For Oënomius was killed with the fall of his Coach, only he had time to desire of Pelops to revenge him on his Coachman, which he did, for the fellow coming in a saucy way to demand the reward of his falsehood, Pelops without any more ado tumbled him headlong into the sea, and there he was drowned.

Whereupon his counterfeiting was discovered, and he taken against his will to the Wars; and being sent into Thrace to forage for Corn, he returned and said, he could find none; Palamedes went and fetched good store from thence: Ulysses to revenge these things counterfeited a Letter in Priamus his name, wherein he thanked Palamedes for his treason intended, and mentioned that he had sent him gold for a reward: Now Ulysses had secretly conveyed gold into his Tent. These Letters were found and read in the Camp; Palamedes was called, Ulysses seemed to defend him, and said there was no craft to be given to the Letters of enemies; but (said he) let some be sent into Palamedes his Tent, and then if there be found any such sum of gold, then he was surely guilty: They sent and found the gold, and Palamedes was condemned, and stoned; his death was afterwards revenged by Nauplius: He in the time of the Trojan war, invented four Greek letters, α, ε, χ, ρ, adding them to the sixteen which had been before invented by Cadmus: He was killed in Astrology, and the first that found out the reason of the Eclipse, and brought the year to the course of the Sun, and the month to the course of the Moon: he found out the skill of ordering an Army, and the giving of the Watchword, which together with these letters they said he learned by the conduct and flying of Cranes; Whence by the Poets they are called Palamedis aves; Mart.

Kalendarium Romanum; in quo, præter seriem Mensium & Dierum Festa, Ludi, Ortus & Occasus Siderum, aliaque nonnulla scitu digna adnotantur.

THE Roman Month is divided into Kalends, Nones and Ides; all which are reckoned backward. The Kalends are the first day of the Month; as Calendis Januariis is the first day of January. Pridie Calendarum vel Calendas, is the 31st. of December; III. Kal. the 30th. IV. Kal. the 29th. &c. The Nones being four, follow the Kalends; as IV. Nonas Jan. is Jan. 2. III. Non. Jan. 3. Pridie Non. Jan. 4. and Nonis Jan. is Jan. 5. But in March, May, July and October there are six Nones. After these the Ides in each Month eight, as VIII. Id. Jan. id est, Octavo Iduum vel Idus is Jan. the 6th. and so till you come to the Ides themselves; Idibus Januariis, that is, Jan. 13. Where note, that when the Accusative Case is used, the Preposition Ante is understood: as 3 Kalendas, Nonas, Idus, tertio ante Calendas, Nonas, Idus. Remember that after the Ides, (which are on the 13th. day of eight of the Months, and on the 15th. of the other four; which have six Nones a piece) the Calends following are to be reckon'd to the next Month.

THERE are several Æra's or Epochas, that is, Dates of Time, used by several Nations, and upon several occasions. The two principal ones and of most general use, especially among Christians, are A. M. Anno Mundi, from the Creation or beginning of the World; and A. D. Anno Domini, from the Birth of our Lord God: which two are here made use of. The former ends in the year 3948, and the latter begins from thence.

To know then what Year of the World any Year of the Lord is, Add the Year of the Lord, (whatever it be) to the Number 3948, and the Total is it.

Again, To know what Year before Christ any Year of the World is under 3948, Subtract the Number given from 3948, the Residue is it.

The Romans reckoned U. C. Urbis Conditæ, from the building of the City of Rome, which was in the Year 3198. So that to know what Year of the World any Year since the building of Rome is, add it to 3198, and that is it. And to know what Year of Christ any such Year is, Subtract 752 (in which Year of Rome, Christ was born) from the Number given, the Remainder is it.

The Grecian Account went by Olympiads, every Olympiad containing four Years. This began in the Year of the World 3174. The Operation will be the same; only, first you must reduce the Olympiad into Years, by multiplying it by 4, and add the odd Years to them, and then proceed by the Total.
